Bud:

I talked with General Carter just before he went to lunch at 1230 and told him that you and I had carefully studied the 13 March NRO agreement and that we had reached the conclusion that a tinkering job was well nigh impossible. He said he had reread the contract too and agreed with us. I then told him that we had redrawn the plumbing diagram and that we were tackling a new agreement which would reflect the plumbing diagram. He said, "That's fine but make the draft short and generalized, omitting much of the detail which the present contract contains." I said we were shooting for a first draft by late afternoon, and he said he would be glad to see us somewhere around 4:30 to 5.
